DR. WEIZMANN

Toronto Jewry was honoured this week by a visit of Dr. Weizmann, head of the world Zionist organization.

It is becoming apparent to Jews at large that the Zionist movement represents the most significant and vital phase of Jewish group existence, and in Weizmann is seen the symbol of the creative urge in Jewdom. Dr. Weizmann, with his dignified bearing and remarkable personality, impresses upon all who come under the spell of his presence the greatness of the cause and ideal which he embodies. It is observable that wherever Dr. Weizmann comes he gains the respect and admiration of professing non-Zionists as well as of those who are classed among his followers. The beauty and profundity of the Zionist conception of Jewish life are worthily represented by his personality.

Dr. Weizmann, as leader of the Zionist organization, has borne and still bears a tremendous burden unequalled among leaders of other national movements. As he put it in one of his addresses "Palestine is a difficult land and the Jews are a difficult people to manage." Not only is he responsible for the policies that shape the conditions of the rebuilding of Palestine, and the machinery that is employed for the accomplishment of this object, but he also has to attend largely to the raising of the funds required for the undertaking. That he bears up so well and radiates optimism is a good indication of the soundness and hopefulness of the Zionist situation.

The remarkable turn-out at the banquet was really a tribute which Toronto Jews paid to the acknowledged leader of world Jewry. They recognize the greatness of the Zionist cause and of its head, and they unmistakably showed their appreciation of the movement and the man.

THE ZIONIST BANQUET

In point of attendance the United Palestine campaign banquet last Sunday night was the most remarkable event of its kind ever held in Toronto. People generally fight shy of entertainments which are known to have been arranged for the purpose of collecting funds. On this occasion over a thousand people came together ready to be inspired and to respond. Hundreds were turned away, unable to gain admittance. The magnet was, of course, Dr. Weizmann. Toronto Jews were eager to see and hear the great Jewish leader, and were prepared to pay any price for the privilege. The very size of the attendance, in some respects, militated against the full exploitation of the possibilities of the situation. So unwieldily big was the crowd, that the machinery for canvassing all the attendants could not be operated properly, and many escaped "scot-free" who under ordinary banquet conditions would have had to put up a struggle to gain immunity.

The presence of a number of non-Zionist notables was a heartening feature. Their support is necessary and welcome. They of course did not "come to scoff," but they are quite likely to "remain to pray."

THE CAMPAIGN

The start made at the banquet was exceedingly gratifying to the workers of the campaign. Over fifty thousand dollars, or two-thirds

HURRAH!

BY RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

The announcement by the Council of Jewish Women that three members of the Jewish community had volunteered to erect a gymnasium for the Jewish Community House on St. George Street was greeted with applause and praise. It was a splendid act of generosity, especially as it was unsolicited, and the men who made the gift did so eagerly and gladly. The Girls' Clubs under the splendid leadership of Miss Adelaide Cohen were handicapped because of a lack of proper recreational facilities. The new gymnasium will fill a need. It will be able to be used for social and intellectual as well as for athletic purposes. It will give the general Jewish community a lecture hall which it needed. Our appreciations go out to the three donors.

As we were rejoicing over the new gymnasium, there came the news of the record-breaking contributions at the Keren Hayesod banquet. Add to that the fact that the Federation of Jewish Charities will soon have a new home at Baldwin and Beverley Streets, to be known as Scheuer House in honour of Mr. Edmund Scheuer, and that the collection of funds for this cause was carried out under the leadership of one of the younger men, and the Toronto Jewish community has much cause for rejoicing. We hope these examples of generosity will spur others on till Toronto will have the institutions which it needs. A Boys' Club building is imperative, so is a Y.M.H.A. To you men who are accumulating wealth—GIVE WHILE YOU LIVE, and experience the joy that altruistic service brings. Who will be the next to cause the community to hurrah?

A LESSON FROM MIDLAND

Twenty-five young boys, children, were recently found guilty of larceny in Midland, Ontario. The community then suddenly realized that it had no organized recreational facilities for these boys, and that it was guilty of negligence. A public-spirited citizen immediately offered $50,000 for a Y.M.C.A. and the public raised as much in a day for its maintenance. A wise community will provide recreational facilities before its children have become criminals and their characters have been infected with social degeneracy.

"A MYSTIC AND STATESMAN"

Principal Grant of Upper Canada College in describing Dr. Chaim Weizmann spoke of him in glowing terms and called him a personality in whom the mystic and statesman are combined. Principal Grant has aptly described the leader of world Zionism. He is a statesman, carrying out all the functions of statesmanship under tremendous disadvantages. He must deal with kings and prime ministers. He must placate the fifty-seven varieties of Zionist and non-Zionist elements amongst Jews. He must be a financier, and make fifty cents do the work of one dollar. He is constantly called upon to solve the delicate and complex problems arising in Palestine, and amongst Jews and also non-Jews throughout the world. Sometimes we think that the task of Moses was easy compared to that of the president of the World Zionist Organization.

LINDSAY SALES INCREASE 20 PER CENT.

An increase of approximately twenty per cent. in sales for February and March of this year over the corresponding months of 1927, is reported by C. W. Lindsay & Co., Limited, Montreal, musical instrument firm.

The company, it will be recalled, passed from private ownership at the beginning of this year when it was purchased by Johnston and Ward, of Montreal, investment bankers, and its stock offered for public subscription.

The progress of the firm following public participation in its securities is a further reflection of the experience of many Canadian companies which, after many years' ownership by families or single individuals, have passed into the hands of the investing public. Practically all Canadian companies which have gone through this development have shown marked progress following a more wide-spread ownership of their securities.

C. W. Lindsay & Co., Limited, maintain stores in Montreal, Ottawa, Three Rivers, Kingston, Quebec and other cities in Quebec and Eastern Ontario. They own exclusive agencies in their territory for such famous products as Steinway and Heintzman Pianos, Estey Organs, Brunswick Panatropes, Stewart-Warner and Fada Radios and other products.

Concrete steps toward final determination of the right of minorities in all European countries are expected to be taken abroad, according to Bennett E. Siegelstein, president of the United Roumanian Jews of America. He predicts this as a result of action by his organization in presenting an exhaustive resolution to the Roumanian Minister at Washington. Real solution of the troubles abroad are now hopefully looked for, judging by the attitude of all parties concerned. Many leading Jewish forces have rallied behind the policy now being followed by the United Roumanian Jews. The Roumanian Minister has written Mr. Siegelstein informing him that he has sent the resolutions to his native land with the hope that they will be favourably accepted. In fact, the Minister went so far as to say that he has urged its adoption. Although representing, primarily, the Roumanian Jews of the world, Mr. Siegelstein's organization will seek to acquire equal rights for all minorities.

People's Forum Presents Zionist

Leonard Jacques Stein spoke on "The New Palestine" at the People's Forum, Sunday, April 15. He was appointed in 1920, as Political Secretary to the World Zionist Association. Born in London in 1887, he was educated at St. Paul's School and Balliol College, Oxford, graduating with first-class honours. While at the university he was elected president of the debating society, the Oxford Union. He served in the army from 1914 to 1920 (12th London Regiment, B.E.F.), being seconded to the War Trade Intelligence Department in 1916. He was subsequently on the staff of the Palestine Military Administration and on the political staff of the E. E. F. in Jerusalem and Cairo. He is a member of the Royal Institute of International Affairs and of the New York Academy of Political Science. He is a member of the Mandates and other committees of the League of Nations, and of the Executive Committee of the Anglo-Jewish Association. He has lectured at Oxford, Cambridge and London Universities, as well as at the Camberley Military College. He is joint editor and contributor to "Awakening Palestine." He has also contributed to the Encyclopaedia Britannica and to the Annual Survey of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. He is prospective candidate for North Kensington at the next general election in England.

"While the Jewish people have been on the defensive, with their backs to the wall, their religion has tended to become a petrified philosophy, and the organic development which is vital to the Hebrew religion will only come when the Jewish people as a whole can feel free to express themselves with natural spontaneity," declared Leonard Jacques Stein, Secretary to the World Zionist Association, at the People's Forum, Sunday, April 15.

"It was to the interest of the world at large that there should be a national home for the Jews in Palestine on account of both material and ideal factors, the speaker said. In the first place there were many Jewish people at present in spiritual discord with themselves and their neighbours. There were others, as in England and America, who were free personally to express and develop their individual talent, but who lacked the opportunity to make the collective contribution to world ideals which their particular national traits might indicate. This opportunity to relax without endangering their cherished ideas, and to make their own self-contained contribution to world progress was, the speaker declared, the great aim in the Zionist movement. The need of supplying an asylum for persecuted Jews of central Europe was a serious but subsidiary aim, he continued.

"It was not necessary for the attainment of this security that the Jews form a majority of the population, Mr. Stein stated, as he explained that Arab anxieties had subsided, as they had seen the intent of the new administration.

"A combination of sincere ideals and enlightened self-interest had been the mixed motives of the British statesmen who evolved the Balfour Declaration, the speaker said. Their sincerity was proven, he claimed, by the interest taken in the Zionist question by such men as Lord Balfour and Joseph Chamberlain many years before the war. On the other hand, it had been obvious that Palestine was in a key position in relation to Egypt, the Suez Canal and India, and that it was of the utmost importance that it should not fall into the hands of a power unfriendly to Great Britain.

"In explaining how the ideal and the self-interest of the Balfour Declaration dovetailed, the speaker noted that it was to Britain's interest that the country should be populated by a people who would be interested in attaining such a highly developed civilization as was the aim of the Jews.

"The progress made by the Zionist Association would not have been possible without the background of British administration, the speaker declared, as he described the improvement in the country since the war in security, education, business, public health and communications. The great difficulty of the Zionist endeavour had been that, with the exception of what private capital had been introduced into the country, the work had been carried on without capital resource, such as a government would have, and with only the backing of the annual voluntary contributions to the Zionist fund, which amount to approximately three and a half million dollars.

"The speaker explained the agricultural difficulties resulting from the fact that much land had lain neglected for years and that many immigrants who brought intellect and enthusiasm to the colony had, nevertheless, no agricultural experience. There was also the difficulty, he stated, that all the land for colonists had had to be bought, as there was no state or national land in the country from which grants might be made. Naturally the value of land had gone up since the project was conceived, with the result of heavy financial strain on the society that was furthering the work.

"In a sense Palestine was a new country, despite its age-old history, Mr. Stein said, and its immigration and agriculture problems were somewhat similar to those of Canada. He felt, therefore, that Canadians might the more readily understand the problems of Palestine. For this reason, and because of the fact that nowhere in the world had Jews given more consistently and generously than in Canada to the cause of Zionism, he was glad, he said, to have this first opportunity of addressing a Canadian audience."

The meeting was in charge of the Rev. Lawrence Clare.

Princess Alexandra Kropotkin will speak on "The Riddle of Russia," on April 22. She is the daughter of the distinguished scientist and political reformer, the late Prince Peter Kropotkin, whose house in London was the meeting place of the great political leaders and reformers of the day.

George E. G. Catlin will speak on "Daytonism and the Church of England" (The Significance of the Prayer Book Defeat), on April 29. Organ recitals by George M. Brewer, from 7 to 7.30 p.m., will precede each lecture.

Rabbi Isserman's Editorial

But Weizmann was prepared for big work—a brilliant student, a distinguished chemist, a man trained to logical thought and yet a poet and a dreamer. Weizmann is well qualified for Jewish leadership. Too many Zionist orators are rhapsodists, fanatics and chauvinists and their words generally are so much bombast and rhetoric. They appeal to hysteria and passion, not to reason and logic. When Weizmann speaks, he speaks facts. You feel the difficulties that confront the movement. He does not sugar-coat them, nor ignore them. In concise and lurid words he paints the realities of Jewish Palestine. You feel that a long struggle confronts the Jew there. He speaks like a practical statesman.

But his message is not one of pessimism. The difficulties he depicts can be overcome—are being overcome, and at present they constitute a challenge to world Jewry. Civilizations are neither created nor recreated in a day or in a decade. The Zionist movement has made mistakes in the past and will make more in the future, but it learns from its experiences.

In all of Weizmann's addresses, the vision of the mystic and dreamer appears. He not only speaks of villages, of sanitation, of education, of immigration, but he can lift himself above the immediate and practical. He can see a spiritual goal, and can envisage as he did at the Canadian Club "a new message of peace coming to the world from the hills of Judaea and Nazareth." Thus he appeals to the intellect and to the soul. Toronto was stirred by his visit. He made many friends for the cause he serves so unselfishly. World Jewry is fortunate in having such able and big-visioned leadership.

In a town in Czecho-Slovakia an interesting problem has recently arisen in the Orthodox Jewish community in connection with the legality of non-Jewish ownership of a seat in the synagogue. The community recently put up for public auction, on the order of the Court, the property of one of its members who was in arrears with his taxes. Among the articles put up for sale was the seat which this Jew held in the synagogue, and this was bought by a man alleged to be a Roman Catholic. The Jewish community refuses to recognize the sale, but the purchaser insists that what he has bought is his property and will not surrender it. The Jewish community is greatly perturbed about the use to which a Catholic might put his seat in the synagogue.

The cave of Machpelah is, contrary to reports previously issued, not after all to be entered by non-Islamis infidels. Apropos of this the German papers are recalling the following amusing tale. In 1869 the Prussian Prince, Frederick Wilhelm, who was then travelling in the East, asked and obtained permission of the Sultan at Constantinople to visit the famous cave. The sheik who was in charge of the cave was a very fanatical person, and his surprise was very great when he learned that for "diplomatic reasons" authorization had been given to an infidel to enter where only believers in Mahomet had the right to enter. "Very well," said the sheik with a mysterious air, "I have received the order to admit you, and I must obey. But I have not received any orders about letting you out." The Prince, it is recorded, courageously preferred not to visit the fatal cave. Discretion even in those days, proved the better part of valour!

Speaking of the Yiddish Theatre

If this were the best of all possible worlds, the Yiddish theatre would have no need for Max Gabel, writes Leonard Traube in the New York World. In Candide's cosmos all men and women are good—life is sweet and pure—it is good to be alive—phrases borrowed from his benevolent metaphysic teacher, the good philosopher Pangloss, if memory errs not.

Mr. Max Gabel has discovered the fallacy of the foregoing and proceeded to give his disclosures dramatic life. His theory of life is grouped about men and women and their physical relationship. Such a thing as what Plato symbolized never enters into Gabel's equation of theatricals. His treatises, in a word, deal with men, women and the evil that revolves about them.

Gabel is the champion of the heavy drama. Musical comedy, travesty, satire and such like seem never to have concerned him at all. A seduction, a liaison or two, three or four love scenes, white slavery, mother love, filial duty, prison bars, shots in the dark, District Attorneys and wayward girls—these have been his treasures.

With these introductory lines I usher in the intelligence that Mr. Gabel brought "A Girl With a Past" to his People's Theatre recently. It is an old story—of a girl who has sinned in her youth, who has made a wanton of her body to a vicious white slaver, who keeps silent of her past iniquity in exchange for lucre—so old that it must be as old as the hills, at the very least. Gabel somehow manages to add something new aside from revolvers, murders and hard-boiled District Attorneys.

Miss Jennie Goldstein is the official interpreter of her husband's dramatic themes. He directs, produces and adapts for her. Sometimes when a fever of magnanimity seizes him he treads the footlights himself.

She is the same Miss Goldstein of "Her Mother's Wedding Gown," "Common Clay," "Her Great Secret," "Public Opinion," "Clear Conscience" and all those earlier vehicles on the Bowery which have drawn patrons from all corners of the city (Bronx, Brooklyn and Manhattan, that is) with crisp, clean, unwetted handkerchiefs. I think Gabel is a boon to the handkerchief industry. And if you should happen to be on the Bowery one of these spring days and take a notion to visit Mr. Gabel's theatre of a Friday, Saturday or Sunday you will understand the allusion, unless, of course, you are as unsympathetic and unmoving as the wicked white slaver portrayed therein. He makes you cry your eyes out for his heroines (he seldom pays attention to heroes—how like a Thackeray!) He knows his Jennie Goldstein, too. Knows her moods and methods and adapts plays or writes originals to suit them.

Of Miss Goldstein some briefs: Living near the old Windsor Theatre, on the Bowery, a stone's throw from that extraordinary and somewhat curious conglomeration of soule—Chinatown . . . with its precarious Pell Street, sometimes turbulent, sometimes taciturn, always replete with Oriental mysteries, chop-suey joints, sugar cane and, so I hear, opium smokers—she seems to have made her bow into theatricals in the child role of "Anna Karenina." It was at this time that Jacob P. Adler, Mme. Lipzin, David Kessler, Sigmund Mogelesco, Bertha Kalich and Malvina Lobel were making history; the airplane was beginning to shock the nation, Lindbergh being only a bouncing baby boy; there was some talk of wireless messages and English Channels; it was a few years past the turn of the century; the mauve decade had come and gone; Jacob Gordon was producing priceless Yiddish dramas.

Her first real successes came at the now decrepit theatre on the Bowery, called Gabel's Theatre and bounded on the north by crockery stores, on the south by the Bowery Mission with its streaming breadlines of ragged gentry and on the west o'erhead by the incessant rat-tat-tat of the Third Avenue elevated to the miraculous harmony of the red-striped cars of the Third Avenue Railway System. That theatre has since been renamed the Caruso and for some unearthly reason the Chinese thespians disport there on occasion. From the Bowery the firm of Gabel-Goldstein migrated to Lenox Avenue "uptown," with varied triumphs. So back to the street of vagabonds and venders they came several years ago. They are bounded now, I understand, by flourishing business.

If Gabel has failed to be creative in his themes, at least his characters are living people, even if done effusively—prototypes of those to be found in this fine, pretty world. If we are inclined to find fault with his one-track treatment of—things theatrical he may answer that he has been Ibsen-like in methods and character delineation. Gabel, like the Norwegian giant whose centennial we have recently celebrated, is something of a reformer, a moralist, a preacher—like the fanatic in Maugham's "Miss Thompson." He is, too, something of a showman.

"A Girl With a Past" was adapted by Gabel from A. Blum's "Her Last Dance," which, by the way, strikes me as being a much better title, though less sensational and less suggestive. The third act brings the action to a rabbi's home in the year 1949. Before the curtain rose for the act I was curious as to the settings. I cherished vague hopes of a three-ringed circus in the home being introduced, or perhaps a magic lantern with music attached, or maybe a mechanical man cleaning windows—but nothing came of it.

Performances that merited some attention were given, I thought, by Samuel Steinberg as the Assistant District Attorney; Charlie Cohen as the vulgar, comic, husky butcher, and David Yanover as the Rabbi of the Temple. Jennie Goldstein was, as always, dramatic, forceful and vivid.

Turning away from tears and heartaches we come upon an operetta of most unusual spendor and workmanship. This is that throbbing piece of William Siegel's called "The Rabbi's Son," which has been running these many months at the picturesque public Theatre on the avenue. The rabbi's son is none other than Ludwig Satz, the perennial comedian and co-producer of the play. The music is by Herman Wohl and the lyrics by N. Stutchkoff.

Herr Satz can raise roars of laughter by merely appearing helpless and innocent. He has but to roll his eyes in that forlorn and resigned manner of his to impress us with his utter incapability and inadequacy. He is an old hand at this kind of portrayal.

Helpless Satz becomes a rabbi, much to his chagrin, when his aged father passes out of the picture, the while his son is whispering soft and soothing words to an orphan in Budapest, for whom, to appear urban and citified, he has cast away the traditional sidelocks (horror of horrors!), eliminated the customary regalia in favour of a more dapper costume and taken on such worldly habits as smoking and kissing, dear me. After his father's demise he hurries home to carry on the work. But his thoughts are troubled—his heart is in Budapest with fond orphan—miserable soul. Kind orphan comes to visit him in his home town discovers he is about to be wedded to a moron and forthwith faints away. Innocent orphan triumphs, however, for she turns out to be none other than the daughter, long lost, of Reb Chatzkel, adviser to the rabbi and father of the moron. The marriage between our young rabbi and orphan takes place and the nincompoop runs off into clowning again; such a thing as marriage is a huge joke to her, as is all other things.

The Public Theatre carries an able cast to supplement the work of Satz. In Zina Goldstein they have an actress that emanates life and who possesses a voice of fine culture; in Fanny Lubritsky, a female lead with versatility and charm; in Sampel Rosenstein, co-producer, an actor with poise and ease. Goldie Shapiro, who plays the part of the incorrigible, clownish moron, was thoroughly enjoyable, so I thought.

Herman Wohl, the composer, has executed something beautiful.

Max Blumenthal, of Great Neck, L.I., for years one of the leading club house commissioners on the New York tracks, died at Palm Beach at the age of 62, following an operation for acute appendicitis. Known for his interests in sports, he gradually developed into a promoter of diversified interests. He handled boxers and was interested in theatrical productions.

Horace B. Liveright and [illegible] Liveright, publishers, who have been on trial for publishing Maxwell Bodenheim's novel, "Replenishing Jessica," were acquitted in a New York court. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty after deliberating fifteen minutes.

Senator Henri Polak, member of the First Chamber of the Dutch Parliament, President of the Diamond Workers' Union, and Curator of the Keren Hayesod in Holland, has celebrated his sixtieth birthday.

THE JUNIOR WELFARE LEAGUE

This young women's organization has a membership of over three hundred and is one of the finest in our community. It has brought sunshine into the lives of underprivileged little ones by sending them to summer camps. It has aided poor mothers to obtain vacation recreation and rest. The young women of Montreal, who are banded together under the banner of the Junior Welfare League, are to be congratulated for their very fine endeavours since the organization's existence. We urge the Montreal Jewish community ever to support the Junior Welfare League in all its branches of activity.

RABBI STARRELS CALLED TO LONDON

It is with profound joy that we learn of Rabbi Starrels' call to the Liberal Jewish Synagogue in London. Rabbi Starrels graduated with us from the Hebrew Union College in 1922. He has made a fine record in his ministry in Lincoln, Nebraska. The London Liberal Jewish community will be enriched spiritually under his assisting leadership. With Dr. Mattuck and Rabbi Starrels as spiritual leaders, the reform Jewish movement in England will make splendid strides. There is no doubt about it. Congratulations to Rabbi Starrels and the London Liberal Synagogue.

SAPIRO DESERVES IT

It is good to read that friend Aaron Sapiro was awarded the Richard Gottheil medal, given annually by the Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity to that individual who serves the cause of Israel best. Sapiro certainly did it the past year. And those wealthy Jews who hid when Sapiro was in need of them need not come to the forefront and pat Sapiro on the shoulder and say: "My, he is a wonderful fellow." Sapiro found too many so-called representative American Jews possessed of the "fear complex" when it came to a show-down. Ah, yes, "the goy-fear, the goy-fear" makes cowards of the bravest among us! But Aaron, courageous, dignified, dared to point his finger to Henry Ford and his millions. He won! His was a just, a righteous cause. All honour to Sapiro. He certainly deserves the medal. Why doesn't the Bnai Brith Anti-Defamation League present him with a token? Aaron Sapiro is an Anti-Defamation League all by himself. You bet he is!

"THE ISLAND WITHIN"

Have you read Ludwig Lewisohn's "The Island Within?" The text of the entire novel is to be found on its penultimate page. It runs as follows: "I don't think that Jews who try not to be Jews do themselves any good in the eyes of intelligent people. There is something wrong with a man who betrays his own kind." In these lines Lewisohn reveals his own attempt to escape Judaism. But at last he found himself by finding and working among "his own kind." Read the book, a splendid sermon it is for those moral cowards who attempt to deny their Yiddishkeit.

Crane porcelain enamel on iron sink C19320. Convenient and economical

The most used fixture of all is the sink

CITING statistics which show that running water in the home saves the lives of eight babies in every hundred, health authorities call good plumbing the most important of all health aids.

"If you cannot afford a complete plumbing system at once," they urge, "install one by units. The first unit should be a good kitchen sink. It is essential to proper food handling and saves a vast amount of labor."

Every home can afford Crane quality in such a fixture as the porcelain enamel on iron sink C19320. Made in eleven convenient sizes to assure one suited to any kitchen large or small, it is handsome, durable, and is offered at a very moderate price.

In the hundreds of fixture-styles and designs to be found in the Crane line, are innumerable others similarly attractive, within reach of small as well as more elaborate homes. Visit the Crane Exhibit Rooms and see the latest types of plumbing and heating materials. You will not be asked to buy, since Crane sells only through responsible plumbing contractors.

Sir Mortimer Davis Mourned in Death by Thousands

Among memorable funerals in Montreal was that of the late Sir Mortimer Davis. At the residence at 516 Pine Avenue West, along the route followed by the funeral procession at Temple Emanu-El, on Sherbrooke Street West, along the route to Mount Royal Cemetery, were gathered crowds of people.

Trustees of Temple Emanu-El attended, taking the place of pall-bearers. Beside and following the hearse bearing the body there was car after car banked with flowers.

Notable among these was a huge plaque from the president and officers of the Federated Jewish Philanthropies. It consisted of a large white and blue crest of the organization, of which Sir Mortimer had been first honorary president and largest contributor, surrounded by hundreds of roses.

Other flowers showed in the names of those who sent them how wide were his interests in business, social, and charitable activities, not only of his own people but of all the people.

The body was taken at 2 p.m., Thursday, April 12, from the family home, where the body was since it arrived from France, where Sir Mortimer died, and, proceeded—most of the mourners on foot—to Temple Emanu-El. As the cortege left Sir Mortimer's residence, a slight drizzle of rain began to fall, later turning into a light snowfall.

There must have been at least 7,000 people standing outside the synagogue when the cortege finally arrived.

It was nearly 3 o'clock then and the people had been waiting over an hour in a freezing drizzle of rain, but neither weather nor a prolonged wait could deter them from paying their respects, and when the cortege finally came the crowd was larger than ever.

At the Davis home on Pine Avenue, so many people had gathered to express their sympathies to the family that many had to be kept out.

Finally small groups of ten or a dozen were allowed in at a time to view the coffin, which was covered with violets, Sir Mortimer's favourite flower.

When the cortege formed up it was an impressive sight.

In front were six large open touring cars filled with wreaths, plaques, and other floral offerings from dozens of organizations to which Sir Mortimer had given his money or his time. The first car was alone, but the others were two abreast.

Immediately behind came the hearse with the coffin, and then, five abreast, the elders of the synagogue, and spreading the entire width of Sherbrooke Street, taking in sidewalks and roadway, hundreds and hundreds of citizens.

Although they were mostly Jews, many Gentiles were also present. So thick had the crowds become in front of the synagogue by this time that a squad of policemen were kept busy letting the ordinary traffic through. When the cortege turned off Peel Street onto Sherbrooke, however, the traffic had to be diverted in a detour around the three blocks facing the synagogue in order to keep it moving. Meanwhile hundreds, men, women and children—in silks, in rags—in cars and afoot, kept vigil in front of the synagogue, which they were not permitted to enter until the coffin, the chief mourners and the elders had gone in. The street in front of the church was lined dozens deep. When the rabbi had received the coffin and the elders were seated at last, the doors were opened wide to a crush of people that could only be accommodated in small part by the capacious synagogue.

Rabbi H. J. Stern conducted ritual services for the members of the family at the home on Pine Avenue each evening last week.

The service, conducted by Rabbi Stern, was according to the ancient Jewish ritual.

Burial was at Mount Royal Cemetery in the plot of [illegible] by the Temple Emanu-El for its members and officers.

Perhaps the heart of the sentiment expressed by the funeral was contained in the rabbi's eulogy when he said:

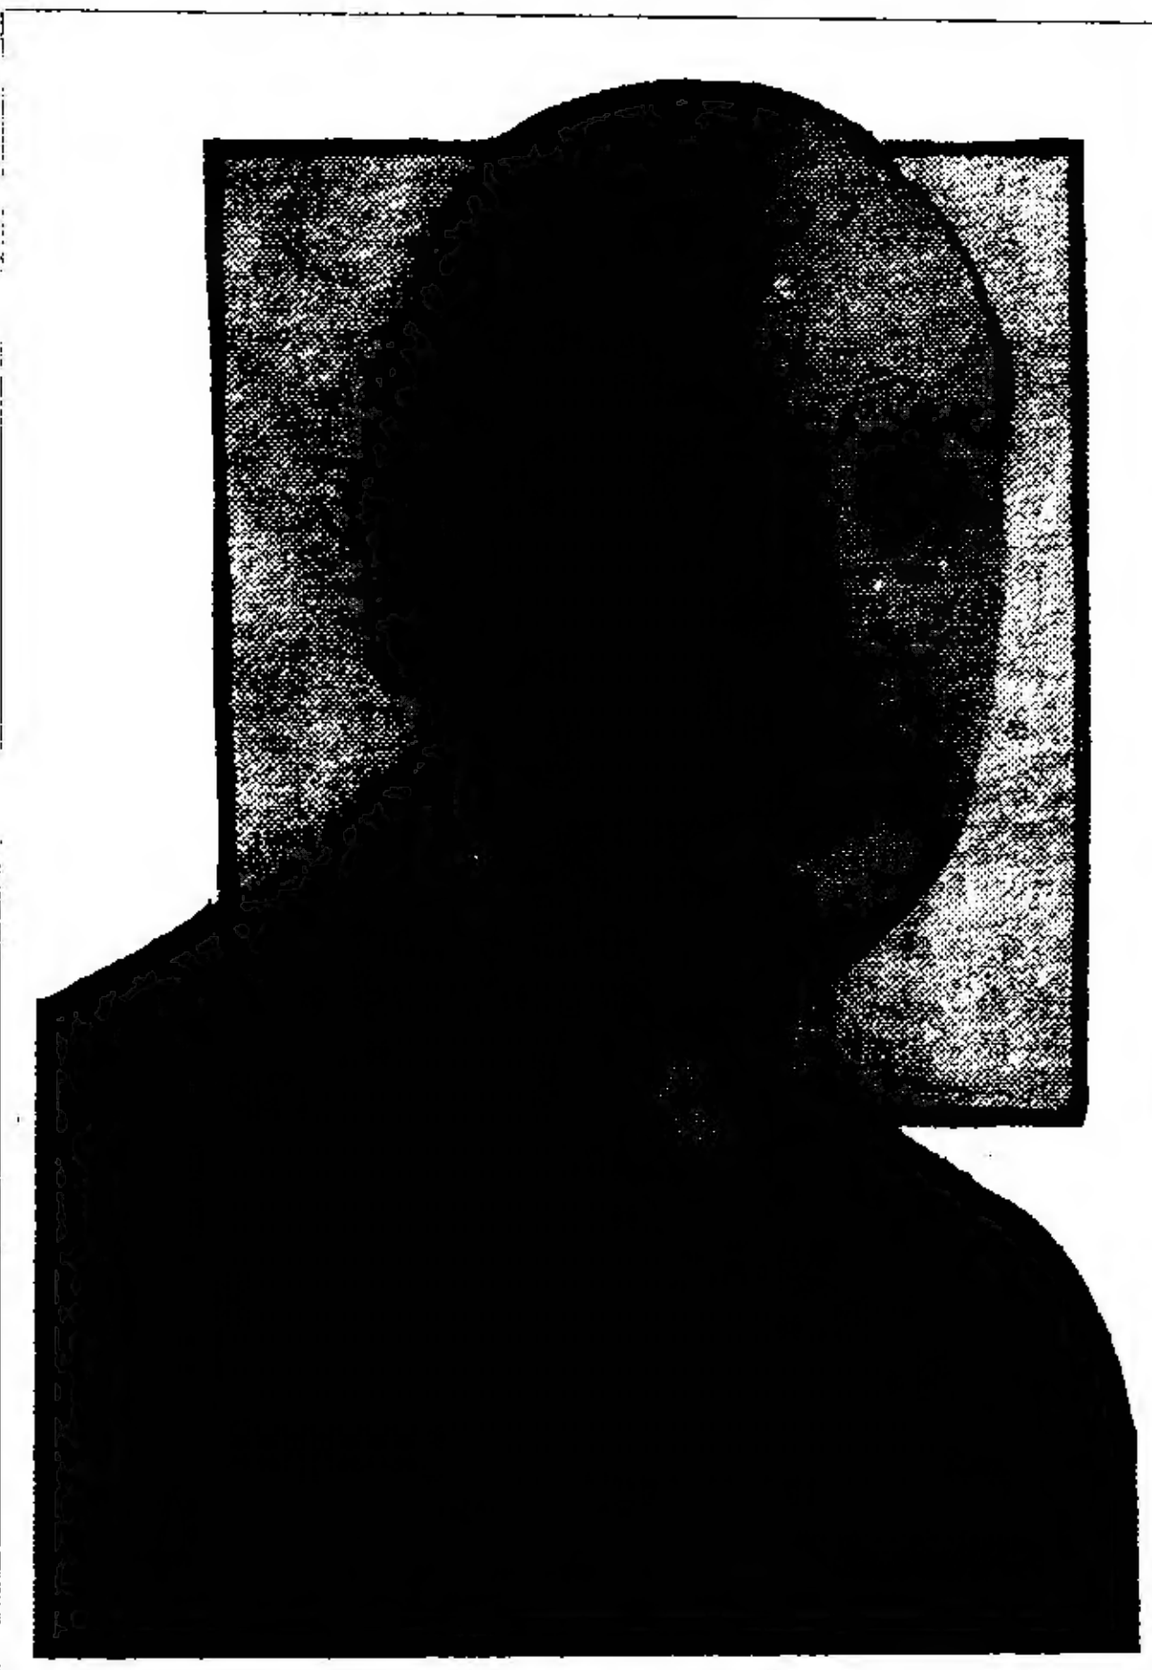
"Sir Mortimer Davis, friends, is not dead. He lives in our hearts. He will live in the history of this Dominion and in the history of the Jews in Canada. His name will endure as a guiding star in the galaxy of the worthy men who became immortal by faithfully serving."

Every organization of a charitable nature to which Sir Mortimer had directly contributed was represented at the funeral.

Chief mourners at the funeral included: Mortimer Davis, Jr.; Samuel Davis and Ned Davis, nephews; A. Curran, brother of Lady Davis. Acting as ushers in the Temple were: Victor Fischel, Reuben Ginsberg, Arthur Jacobs, Clarence Michaels, Dave Jassby, Leon Fingard, J. P. Levee, Harold Neumann, Meyer Medine, John Kuppenheimer, Jerry Lewinsohn, George Goldstein, and H. Lazarus.

At the Temple the body was met by Rabbi Stern, and was borne into the building to music. The reading of the memorial service for the dead followed, and then the Temple resounded with the strains of "Kol Nidrei," played on the organ by George M. Brewer, F.A.G.O., organist at the Temple.

Two songs were sung, a contralto solo, "O Rest in the Lord," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," by Mrs. A. W. Schell, and a tenor solo, Mendelssohn's "He Counteth All Your Sorrows," by Archie Taylor.



The Late Sir Mortimer Davis

The twofold significance of Sir Mortimer's life was dwelt upon by Rabbi Stern during the course of a brief and feeling eulogy, the rabbi pointing to the late financier's realization of the community's needs and the part he played in it, and to his loyalty both to his race and country.

The rabbi spoke as follows:

"As though it were yesterday, this funeral hour revives the memory of seven months ago when many of us gathered to bid farewell to Sir Mortimer Davis on the occasion of his departure for France. There was no thought of more than temporary parting, no foreshadowing of a physical separation which neither time nor space can bridge.

"But strange and mysterious are the ways of the Almighty and otherwise from our desires. Thus without warning was the rare personality, Sir Mortimer, removed from our midst! Had it been given to us to control the affairs of life, how different would it have been. God wills it otherwise and until daybreak when shadows flee away we reverently bow the head and bend the knee in pious resignation to pray:

"Father, Thy will be done.

"There was a two-fold splendor about Sir Mortimer Davis which will ever challenge those who have lived in his day and those who are to carry on in days to come.

"Sir Mortimer Davis possessed the educated heart—the big heart which responded with sympathy for the poor, the lowly and the humble. He felt the pain of their suffering. And like a ministering angel, by his generosity and acts of kindliness he brought hope and cheer to them. The thoughts and feelings of his heart were dedicated toward helping others. His big frame was simply an outer manifestation of the bigness of his soul. Hardly a single communal institution of this city that did not feel the effect of his generosity and his directing mind. And the uniqueness of Sir Mortimer is not that he was generous—acquiring wealth in abundance he could well afford to give—we rather praise the manner in which he shared his wealth—cheerfully, joyfully with a spirit of love. He gave not as a matter of duty or obligation, but looked upon giving as a sacred religious privilege. Indeed, Sir Mortimer Davis was blessed with the 'good heart.' And according to the sages in Israel such a heart is pleasing in the sight of God. And after all, one earthly thing is permanent. One thing alike defies time and endures throughout eternity—'Goodness'—for goodness is born of God and exists with God. Greatness in man dies with man, but goodness in man is as eternal as his and its creator. A man of good heart never dies.

"And the other spiritual quality which gave splendor to the life of our friend was uncompromising 'Loyalty.' He was an enthusiastic Canadian. He loved the land of his birth. He saw in Canada the synonym for humanity. He looked upon the Dominion as a land of promise for the oppressed of other climes. He felt keenly the obligation of citizenship. He was in the front ranks of movements for civic righteousness. And when this country was called to enter the World War, he gave it in word and deed the full devotion of his patriotism.

"Glory as he did in Canadianism, he equally gloried in his Judaism. Sir Mortimer Davis never divorced himself from his people, Israel. He was rather proud of his ancestry. He well kept in mind that within his veins flowed the blood of great prophets and sages—of the chosen of God. Thus he has always been a generous, enthusiastic and loyal supporter of this congregation. From 1895 until the angel of death summoned him to his eternal home he held office in this Temple. And in the larger Jewish community, Sir Mortimer allied himself with all forms of communal endeavour. Indeed, for years he has been the mainstay of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. Because of his fine public spirit, his identification with every noble civic endeavour, his promotion of industry, his magnificent philanthropy which knew no distinction of race or creed, Sir Mortimer glorified the name of Israel and sanctified the God of our fathers, in loyalty to Judaism, and in his love of his people and the cause of Israel.

"To the broken family circle whose days have turned to sorrow, the sympathy and prayer of the community go out. We commend them to the God of our fathers, who keepeth watch over his own. God is with us in death as in life. When the golden bowl is broken and his silver cord is loosed—we pause, we wonder, we weep—but God doeth all things well and we may abide in the promise that underneath and around about us are His everlasting arms.

"Sir Mortimer Davis, friends, is not dead. He lives in our hearts. He will live in the history of this Dominion and in the history of the Jews in Canada. His name will endure as a guiding star in the galaxy of the worthy men who became immortal by faithfully serving Israel and humanity.

"God bless and hallow the name and heritage of Sir Mortimer Barnett Davis."

Following the pronouncement of the 23rd Psalm the funeral cortege filed from the church to the playing of Chopin's Funeral March.

At the cemetery the traditional Jewish service was held, the reading of Psalm 91, followed by the saying of the "Kaddish."

Probably the body which feels the loss of Sir Mortimer most is the governing officers of the Temple Emanu-El. A tower of strength in their councils, a coffer of illimitable wealth where distress and need were concerned, he meant much to them. When word of his death was flashed from France the following resolution was passed by the board of trustees:

"The members of the board of trustees of Temple Emanu-El have learned with profound sorrow of the sudden death of Sir Mortimer B. Davis, honorary trustee and life-long member of the congregation and generous benefactor of our community.

"From the inception of Temple Emanu-El (of which his respected father, the late Samuel Davis, was a charter member, and for many years president) and throughout its existence, Sir Mortimer has been a generous, enthusiastic and loyal supporter of the congregation. His advice and means were always at its disposal and his interest in the progress of our institution was made manifest on many occasions.

"Be it therefore resolved, that we record the sense of great loss which our congregation has sustained in his demise and desire to express to Lady Davis and Mr. Mortimer Davis our deepest sympathy in their great bereavement."

Official representatives of the various philanthropic organizations and former business associates of the late Sir Mortimer Davis were present at the funeral.

The funeral cortege was headed by the trustees of Temple Emanu-El, of which body the late Sir Mortimer Davis was an honorary trustee at the time of his death. Editor, CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW:

The column entitled "every friday" in your issue of March 30, 1928, has just come to my notice, and I wish to take the opportunity of commenting upon some of the statements contained in it.

You do not seem to think that the results achieved by our Society during the twenty-eight years of its activity are sufficient to make much "patter" about. Perhaps not—if the figures are considered by themselves. But if you look beyond the figures to the larger significance of a Jewish agricultural movement, the results are by no means of small dimension. After all, a movement of this kind is not such as to lend itself to settlement en masse. A selective process must be applied. It is not the purpose to convert American Jews, or even a large number, into farmers. The aim is solely to make accessible to farm aspirants a source of advice, guidance and financial help. There are many farm-minded Jews. Without an agency such as ours, many would flounder about and be left without the direction and financial assistance that beginners in a venture so new and so strange should have at their disposal.

To us, who are interested in the cause, the significance of the movement lies in the fact that it gives our occupational composition a more even pattern by counter-balancing, at least to a small extent, the great disparity between urban and rural population. Further we believe a sound Jewish farm movement, irrespective of size, to be a good antidote against anti-semitism, in that it dispels the erroneous belief that the Jew is by choice and aptitude a city man; that he has neither the inclination nor the ability to farm.

There is an evident misconception on your part to which I would like to draw your attention. Your statement that "with all the best arguments in the world on tap" we have "no soft job selling the idea of Jews being farmers," gives your readers a wrong impression as to our purposes. Ours is not a propagandist agency. We do not go out to preach the gospel of farming. We have no "idea" to sell. We discourage from farming many more than we encourage to enter it. If we have any "job," it is that of dissuasion rather than of persuasion.

The movement must be considered qualitatively rather than quantitively. Whether or not the numerical results are such as to justify "cheer and encouragement" in the hearts of its protagonists, the results, measured in terms of the comfort that it brings to large numbers —I say it without boastfulness—are such as to give us no little satisfaction.

I hope that these few observations will clear up some misapprehensions under which it is apparent that you labour. I am particularly anxious that newspapermen should have a thorough understanding of the function of our Society and of the cause for which it stands. Only through such understanding are they able to interpret properly the implications of a movement of such importance to American Jewry, to give their readers a fair, unbiased, even if sympathetic, viewpoint.

Very truly yours,

GABRIEL DAVIDSON,
General Manager.

UNITED SYNAGOGUE CRISIS AVERTED

The crisis that has arisen in the Council of the United Synagogue of England, which threatened to disrupt English Jewry, has been amicably adjusted at a meeting recently held, under the chairmanship of Lionel de Rothschild. The controversy, as reported in these columns recently, turned on the point of safeguarding the constitution, and this was brought about by the recent vote which admitted women to membership on synagogue boards. The resolution, which takes away the right of tampering with the constitution from the Council, elicited the threat on the part of several members of the Council that they would have to resign from that body. This led to the convocation of the meeting, held on March 12, when the resolution was rescinded and the whole question turned over to a special committee consisting of the honourary officers and six additional members. In explaining the attitude of the officers, Sir Robert Waley Cohen explained that while they considered it right that an organization like the United Synagogue should not respond very easily to what might appear to be a new world, but what in reality might be no more than a passing fashion, they still felt that sufficient leeway be permitted them so as to be able to adapt themselves to "the requirements of ordered evolution."

INTER-MARRIAGE IN GERMANY

A Jewish paper in Munich has recently published some data regarding intermarriages among Jews which indicate a constant increase in the practice since 1901. In the course of the first quarter of this century, the percentage of intermarriages among the Jews of Germany was 32.3 to the total number of marriages. In the past five years the ratio was as follows: In 1921, 33 per cent.; in 1922, 40 per cent.; in 1923, 37 per cent.; in 1924, 48 per cent., and in 1925, 46 per cent. In the vast majority of cases the children of mixed marriages are brought up in the Christian church, so that the great danger of a gradual extinction of German Jewry is now becoming more and more real. The paper concludes: "Coupled with the fall of the Jewish birth rate, it is a very grave sign. There will be many generations yet before German Jewry dies out, but if the two-children system of Jewish marriages in Germany which is decimating the Jewish population, is maintained, and the mixed-marriage system goes on, the end is in sight."

A curious and highly involved theological discussion has arisen in Hull, England, that will in the end set a precedent and attract world-wide attention. After fourteen years' worship in a synagogue, converted out of a Congregational chapel, the 700 members of the Hebrew congregation of Cogan Street, Hull, have been forbidden to worship in the building by Rabbi Schwartz. Beneath the synagogue are some old vaults, and Rabbi Schwartz has stated that: "Worshippers attending services should perform the ablution obligatory of Jews after visiting a cemetery. The fact that ecclesiastical permission had been given was a sufficient guarantee that the synagogue was still holy as a place of worship, and the council of the synagogue had decided to decline to accede to the request of Rabbi Schwartz to close the synagogue immediately. The matter is receiving the attention of the Beth Din (the ecclesiastical court of the United Synagogues of the British Empire) in London, and it is anticipated that the Chief Rabbi will be asked to adjudicate.

When laymen criticize the rabbinate or ministry in general their criticism is not considered constructive no matter how true it is. It is called unsympathetic, unjustifiable, harmful to church or synagogue and destructive only. A number of critical comments on synagogues, rabbis, churches and churchianity have been made recently in outstanding publications by ministers themselves, so at last here is criticism on subjects pertaining to the ministry which may possibly be constructive. It applies to Jewish and Christian churches.

In the March Scribner's, Charles Fiske, Bishop of Central New York, has an article entitled "Saving Souls Through Church Suppers," in which he asks if the church is selling its birthright for a mess of entertainment. He goes below the surface of religious activities to find out if they have spiritual value. Bishop Fiske examines the boredom with which congregants attend church suppers and men's club activities but stresses the necessity of the church bringing its members together for friendly service, for breaking down social barriers, for brotherly understanding. He feels, however, that there must be a definite change in parish house activities to meet new needs. At present organization has been overdone. The decline of the pulpit may be due to the contagion of the parish house with its hysterical effort to provide fresh entertainment through live-wire talks and peppy addresses. There should be less parochial activity and more inspirational preaching, definite teaching and a new emphasis on worship. Sensation-mongering preachers must discover that people want sincerity and truth, that they are keener than ever in recognizing what is thin and superficial, that while an occasional vaudeville pulpiteer may attract a crowd the permanent results are perilously threatening to religion. The writer says the new parish house must have study classes, discussion classes, men's clubs which do not begin with dishes and end with ashes but which interest men in discussions of life problems and frank study of the difficulties of faith and morals. The new parish house must be a cultural centre with library, lecture rooms, club quarters, a home of friendship which even offers daily kindergarten privileges. The thoughtful minister must feel the call to serve youth whose interests have been overlooked so tragically by the generation now passing. Youth has broken with tradition and will no longer accept ideas on mere authority but it can be equipped to do its own thinking.

In the March Atlantic Monthly there is a brilliant article on "Nonconformity" by the Reverend Lloyd C. Douglas, written to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination into the ministry. He feels that the churches might easily and quickly rise to an unquestioned position of confidence and respect in the opinion of the general unchurched public by doing adequately the things for which they were manifestly intended and finding time and energy for these things by abandoning endeavours for which they have small talent and little success. The greatest need in contemporary American life is for the recovery of a lost serenity. The writer finds the churches too noisy, trying to outyell the theatres, department stores and the realtors. The advertisements of churches in the papers screech of peppy programmes or sensational pronouncements on political campaigns and have little to offer a pleasure-mad public that it cannot find elsewhere. The church "service" is intended to buck you up, the hymns are sprightly and the pastor is a he-man while the real need of the church's potential following is an opportunity to worship and to meditate calmly, to recover spiritual poise and to experience peace. The writer thinks the clergy is mistaken in its belief that the people want folksy, chatty churches. He goes on to say that the churches are too meddlesome. The average preacher, whose experience of industrial problems is restricted to what he reads, knows just enough about economics to speak its academic dialect and lacks just enough practical knowledge of shop problems to make his stormy counsel on such matters not only valueless but more or less dangerous. The church has too little self-respect. This generation needs good discipline but the church does not administer it. Instead, the preacher must hear advice from the subordinate who cannot talk back to his chief, the henpecked husband, the officious woman, the ambitious youth, and must tolerate much shabby, irreverent treatment.

The above is an attempt to compress the most of two long articles in very small space with some sentences verbatim. The following is taken from an editorial by Rabbi S. Felix Mendelsohn in The Sentinel: "We are frank enough to admit that some of the criticisms which are being directed against the sermonic material of certain of our rabbis are quite justifiable. A sermon is a religious message and when delivered from a Jewish pulpit it should be a Jewish message. The aim of a congregation is not to bring people together to be treated to the eloquence of the rabbi, but to worship God. The sermon is, therefore, only incidental to public worship and it should, under no circumstances, be made the centre of attraction. The late Dr. Kaufmann Kohler, president of the Hebrew Union College, advised his students to preach always on a text from the Bible, for it is thereby alone that the rabbi is able to impress upon his people that his sermon is not an ordinary address, but a part of the service. What, however, are certain of our rabbis doing? They preach on any subject, regardless of whether it is religious or not—provided it has something to do with a sensational topic which is discussed in the newspapers. Such a policy does not help the synagogue and it even does not help the rabbi. For even if he is the most eloquent speaker people will not come to hear him regularly, since they feel that if they don't hear him this time they will be able to hear him some other time. Besides, a rabbi, no matter how brilliant he may be, cannot speak authoritatively on all secular subjects and he is therefore lending himself to that unnecessary criticism of which our distinguished layman is complaining bitterly. The synagogue must teach the modern Jew to worship—for, unfortunately, the younger generation is fast losing this art. To accomplish this end we need a more beautiful service and less emphasis upon the sermon. Eloquent sermons alone will not attract the modern Jew to the synagogue. Of course there are half a dozen rabbis in the country who are filling their places of worship every week with their eloquence, but even these rabbis do not have any permanent worshippers, and then in addition to good oratory there are also social factors which attract people to these synagogues. As a rule, however, rabbis who feed their people on sensational sermons will ere long discover that this procedure is subversive of the best interests of the synagogue."

Zionists Open Campaign

Not since the famous Vimy banquet of eight years ago have there been such crowds and such excitement in the ballroom of the King Edward as at the Zionist banquet Sunday night.

Eleven hundred of Toronto's Jewish people turned out to honour Dr. Chaim Weizmann, where 400 were expected. Overflow accommodation was provided for 200 in the gallery of the ballroom and for a hundred in an adjoining room.

Fifty thousand dollars was raised from those present towards the $75,000 objective which is Toronto's share of the million-dollar purchase, by the Jews of Canada, of a twenty-five square mile property in Palestine.

Ancient Jewish songs resounded in the King Edward. In one part of the ballroom were collected the "legionnaires," the Jewish volunteers from Canada who fought under Allenby, and they sang the "Yah-chali-li" or "We've Come to Life," the marching song of the 40th Battalion, Royal Fusiliers, one of the Jewish regiments mostly recruited in Canada, which fought in Palestine.

Sigmund Samuel was chairman of the banquet, with Dr. Weizmann as the guest of honour and Mrs. Archibald Silverman, of Providence, R.I., as a special speaker for the appeal.

A huge map of the 25-mile area of Palestine which has been bought by Canada's Jews for a million dollars was set up, and when the appeal was made, leading into the coming week of campaign in Toronto, they marked off on the map, as staff officers mark off the captured ground in battle, the acres as they were paid for in the new conquest of Palestine.

David Dunkelman set the ball rolling with the first donation of $10,000 and was followed by M. Gelber with $5,000. Then followed a score of $1,000 donations, among which were Mr. Samuel's and N. L. Nathanson's.

"I made a little gamble a few weeks ago," stated Sam Kronick, "and I promised to give to this campaign whatever I made out of the gamble. I have much pleasure in making my contribution $1,000."

Speaking of the colonization of Palestine, Dr. Weizmann declared that it differed from any other colonization in history in that it was being done through peaceful methods and not by means of bayonets.

"The absence of British soldiers in Palestine in spite of the fact that she is surrounded by turbulent neighbours is due to two things—the wise and competent administration by the British Government and the work of the Zionist organization," he said.

The great magnet which drew the Jews to Palestine, he continued, was the attraction of an indestructible tradition. "Palestine will be rebuilt with many difficulties and many tortures, but its building will redound to the credit of the Jews and when a man asks you what a Jew can do, then, free from chains and slavery, you can point to Palestine," he said.

The work must necessarily be slow, Dr. Weizmann warned his audience, because in all the countries the Jews had lived in, they had found civilizations, constitutions and cultures ready-made. In Palestine they were building something, new, original and their own.

Mrs. Silverman, after paying tribute to Mrs. Dunkelman as the mother of Zionism in Toronto, and to Mrs. Selick as an organizer beyond comparison in turning out such a gathering as last night's, made an emotional appeal immediately preceding the call for the campaign.

"If you had millions of dollars," said Mrs. Silverman, "you could not open the gates of Canada to the Jews of Europe. If you had billions you could not open the gates of the United States. But Palestine is the ancient homeland. And you can open its gates with only a little of your wealth. You can make it a homeland indeed for the countless Jews of Europe who are oppressed and poverty-stricken as only we can believe. A restored Palestine is the answer to our prayers, a load off our consciences, a redemption of our pride, whatever nation we give our full allegiance to to-day."

At the head table, in addition to the speakers mentioned, were: N. L. Nathanson, David Dunkelman, Elias Pullan, Harry Clavir, Sam Kronick, Rabbi F. M. Isserman, Rabbi Sachs, Charles Draimin, Isidore Brodey, Louis M. Singer, F. S. Hutner, H. M. Smith, and from Montreal, A. Levin and R. A. Darwin.

United Palestine pledges received up to Tuesday evening, April 17: Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Abiscott, $40; L. Adelberg, $100; Mr. and Mrs. C. Alter, $20; Wm. Agranove, $150; B. Alexandroff, $25; H. PURITY FLOUR

RECIPE FOR WINDBEUTEL

Put one cup of water and one-quarter pound of butter on to boil. When it begins to boil stir in one-quarter pound of sifted Purity Flour. Stir until it leaves the kettle clean, take off the fire and stir until milk-warm, then stir in four eggs, one at a time, stirring until all used up. Flavour with the grated peel of a lemon. Put on some rendered butter in a kettle. When the butter is hot, dip a large teaspoon in cold water and cut pieces of dough with it as large as a walnut, and drop into the hot butter. Try one first to see if the butter is hot enough. Do not crowd—they want plenty of room to raise. Dip the hot butter over them with a spoon, fry a deep yellow and sprinkle powdered sugar over them.

Purity Flour is stocked by all first-class grocers and department stores

"We do lots of strange things!"

In your spring housecleaning do not overlook the fact that this laundry washes anything "washable," from circus tents to pocket handkerchiefs. Rag carpets, boat sails, dusters—in fact, a surprising lot of articles—are included in the family washes sent us during the spring season. And our customers are delighted with the results. If in doubt about the "washability" of any article phone our young lady and she will be able to tell you. We have, of course, five different kinds of "family wash" service, all done with soft water and pure soap—each separately. Phone now.

"THE GLAD CANDY"

WITH YOUNG JUDAEANS

Senior and Upper-Intermediate Skit Night was held in the Talmud Torah auditorium, Monday, April 9. Miss Rohama Siegel introduced the chairman of the evening, Philip Goldman, president of the Senior Council. Dave Dubinsky, of the Bialiks, gave a piano solo. The Hart Boys presented a "Farce Seder." Abe Weisberg took the part of the mother; Abe Miller, the father; Sol Cohen the young son; Jack Applebaum, the daughter; David Finkelberg, the son with the derby, and Dave Fine was the college son. D. Fine gave a violin selection. The Muliso Girls presented the "Making Over of Yente Cohen." Cast: Jean Cohen, Jessie Garfield, Helen Solomon, Freda Clavir, Ann Gurwich and Sally Layefsky. The Jordan presentation was introduced by Dr. Mark Zimmerman. Phil Goldman, M. R. Bellack, Bill Cohen, Eli A. Bohnen, Dan Bohnen and M. N. Kertzer took part. Murray Sandler, of the Administrative Board, rendered the decision on behalf of the judges, Miss R. Siegel, Miss B. Steinberg and himself, in favour of the Hart Boys. Mr. Harris, treasurer of the Zionist Council, announces that the Talmud Torah will form a special Hebrew class for any young people from the ages of sixteen to eighteen, who have had little or no Hebrew education. Names may be submitted to the supervisor, Miss Siegel, at the Talmud Torah. Further particulars will be announced in the REVIEW.

Muliso Girls' second anniversary was celebrated afternoon and evening, April 14. A theatre party was followed by a supper at the home of Miss Helen Soloman, 509 Markham Street. The party went on to the Young Judaean dance at the Men of England Assembly Rooms.

Final Lower-Intermediate debate was held in the Beth H'Amedrish of the Talmud Torah, Sunday afternoon, April 15. The Hasmoneans, leader, Abe Lazarus, upheld the negative, and defeated the Queen Esther Girls, leader, Bertha Steinberg, who upheld the affirmative on the subject "Resolved that the Maranns were justified in living outwardly as Christians." Ner Littner and Willie Zimmerman spoke for the Hasmoneans and Sadie Schwab and Becky Bronstein for the Queen Esthers. Miss G. Siegel delivered the decision for the judges, Dr. H. Rivkin, M. Sandler and herself. About 200 people attended the Junior Pesach meeting. Skits were presented by the following clubs with the following members taking part: Happy Hearts, leader, Miss M. Otis, presented the Gladmaker with Ruthie Leibovitz, Minnie Rosenfeld, Dorothy Leibovitz and Bessie Otis. The Loyal Girls, under the direction of Miss Doris Tenenbaum, staged the "Slave from Egypt," with Lilly Goldhar, Fannie Yuchtman, Ruth Singer, Esther Pasternak, Sarah Kates, Esther Goldstein, Ruby Goldstein and Sarah Caplan. The Szold Girls, leader, Miss C. Rosen, produced "Some Dates," with Ida Winter, Zella Rosen, Riva Appelby, Rivkah Harneck, Sylvia Green and Muriel Freedman. The "Grandchildren's Seder Night" was the offering of the Rebecca Girls, leader, Ada Cohen. The whole club took part in this sketch. Programme: Mary Swadron, recitation; Joyce Tenenbaum, dance; Lillian Wilson piano solo; Cyril Pishofsky, song, accompanied by Edith Pishofsky, Rebecca Britzstein, piano solo; Sylvia Shoot, dance; Margaret Tenenbaum, recitation; Sophie Eisen, recitation; Annette Newman and Ruth Soltz, dialogue. Miss Marion Jackson, assisted at the piano. The grandmother was taken by Gertie Burke and the grandfather by Tobie Steinwortzel. The offering of the Flowers of Zion was a spring dance with the leader, Miss T. Pollock, at the piano. Sally Borsuk, who represented the Deborah Girls, sang and danced. Mary Iscovitz, of the Flowers of Zion, and Ruth Singer of the Loyal Girls, recited. About 115 Senior Young Judaeans with their leaders attended the annual dance held at the Men of England Assembly Rooms, Saturday evening, April 14.

The Nordia Girls held a mother and daughter meeting Sunday afternoon, April 15. In a debate "Resolved that a Woman Should Give Up Her Career on Marriage," May Sacks and Tillie Garr upheld the affirmative and Sarah Hurwitz and Minnie Mindlin, the negative. Affirmative won. Two new clubs, the Sons of Solomon, leader, Arthur Schlifer; and the Allenby Boys, leader, Dr. H. Rivkin, have been formed in the past week.

A theatre party followed by an entertainment at the home of Miss Helen Weinberg, was held by the Naomi Girls, Wednesday, April 11. Toasts were given the leader, Miss Salamansky, and to Miss Clavir, understudy, who was formally introduced to the club. Those present were Misses Pearl Altman, Thelma and Rose Berger, Freida Clavir, Bertha Forman, Anne Gertzbein, Frances Hartzman, Freda Levenson, Bessie Lubie, Ruth Mendelson, Ray Salamansky, Yvetta Seigal, Jean Simmers, Clarice Silverstone, Fannie Stein, Ray Weiner, Helen Weinberg and Tillie Hirschhorn.

LEAGUE MEETING SUNDAY

Jewish Community Softball League meets Sunday at the Frat House, 5 Willcocks Street, at 2.30 p.m. sharp. The following teams must have their representatives present: Mt. Sinai, Sunnysides, Herzl Zion Club, Jud Benevolent, Y.M.H.A. Tuex, U.L.P.S. Sigma Alpha Mu, Bnai Brith, Leanords, and Hasmoneans, as well as any other teams wishing to enter the league. There is still a vacancy in the Business Men's group, and applicants for the vacancy must apply to the meeting in person, and be prepared to give all necessary information, as well as having their franchise fees ready. Teams are notified through THE REVIEW to be ready to pay their fees to the treasurer at the meeting, $30, of which $10 is returnable at the end of the season if no games are defaulted. Teams must procure certificates from the secretary at Sunday's meeting, as all forms must be in to the executive by May 1. Teams in Business Men's group are warned that only bona-fide business men will be eligible to play in the first group, and no younger fellows will be allowed to play, if in the opinion of the executive they are not qualified. Players used by the various teams must be bona-fide members of their organizations, and all certificates must be filled out in full with the signatures of the necessary officers attached. Any certificates not filled out in full will be returned, and the player will not be eligible until all conditions are complied with. The matter of a schedule will be taken up and the teams must notify the league as to their nights.

CONCERT MAY 8

of the objective, was realized out of this one event. This amount is larger than the entire objectives of each of the last two or three campaigns.

But it must be borne in mind that the fifty thousand dollars were contributed by a comparative handful of people—less than three hundred altogether, including organizations. What about the rest of Toronto Jewry? There are still a very large number of Jews of considerable means whose names are not on the banquet list of contributors. And the general public, the middle class and the masses must not be denied the opportunity of participating in the work of redemption.

It is not now a question of attaining the objective. In all probability the desired maximum will be exceeded. The question now is how to reach the three or four thousand other Jews who are potential contributors, and should not be left out of the fold. The fact that some individuals were particularly generous does not warrant the granting of exemption to thousands who should also give.

It is the business of the campaigners to see to it that a thorough city-wide canvass be made and the proposition of the upbuilding of Palestine placed before the entire Jewish community. It must be remembered that this year's campaign has an especially Canadian aspect which makes a particular appeal to Canadian Jews. There is the Keren Hayesod—the basis and sine quo non of Zionist activity. But there is also the matter of the Emek Ha Sharon which Canadian Jews have purchased from the Arabs and have obligated themselves to pay for. In acquiring the Emek, Canadian Jews feel that they have made a specific, distinct, and distinguisnable contribution to the Palestinian process. The Emek will be an everlasting witness and monument of Canadian generosity and achievement. The idea of a permanent Canadian investment in Palestine appears to have caught the fancy of the Jews who have so far been approached. In nearly every instance has the customary contribution been increased to cover an appropriation for the Emek purchase. It is conceivable that the balance of the community who remain uncanvassed will be equally susceptible to the intriguing proposition of buying land in the Emek. They should be approached.

The workers will have the encouraging feeling that they are working for a popular cause which renders the campaign certain of success. Let them persevere in their efforts until the field is fully covered, and then they will have the unprecedented pleasure of having gone beyond the quota. And Palestine needs all the money which Toronto Jewry can raise for its revival.

LOEW'S

Marion Davies in the filmed version of Barry Connor's fascinating stage romance, "The Patsy," is the screen presentation at Loew's next week and with such a play-star combination the fans are assured of a rollicking picture. Miss Davies excels as a coquette comedienne and in this ultra modern setting as a leap year fiancée she is at her best. There is an excellent cast, and they are all good to look at, while Lawrence Gray is a stunning leading man for the fair Marion.

On the stage there is novelty and music to please varied tastes and chief among the attractions will be the personal appearance of James J. Corbett, former world's heavyweight champion, who with Bobby Barry, the half-pint comedian, will present an unusually interesting act. The science of the prize ring will be combined with fun of the most hilarious nature when the little fellow steps in the way of the famous leather pusher.

The Jewish Communal elections in Leipzig have resulted in the return of five Liberals, three members of the Jewish People's Party, two orthodox Jews, and one Poale-Zionist.

Generous Prizes For Boys and Girls

TO every school boy and girl in Canada there is offered $600.00 in prizes for essays on the subject "Laura Secord, The Woman Who Made Confederation Possible." The wonderful exploit of Laura Secord, her courage and bravery on that June day in 1813, has gone down in history as one of the greatest and most outstanding events. To encourage a study of this and other outstanding achievements, these generous prizes are made possible through the courtesy of Laura Secord Candy Shops.

This subject should appeal to all youthful Canadians and all those who are interested in the development of this country, not only in past years, but in the years to come. Without the wonderful achievement of this Canadian heroine, the whole history of Canada might have been altered. Write your essay now. If you know of any boys and girls who should be interested in this subject, will you please tell them, so that everyone will have a chance to enter in this important contest.

If you would like any further information, there is a copy of a booklet which is given free at every Laura Secord Candy Shop, that tells all about this splendid contest, or you may get it by mail from the Contest Committee at 11 Leader Lane, Toronto, or 507 Viger Avenue, Montreal.

The judges are: Mr. Gregory Clark, of The Toronto Star Weekly; Mr. George Locke, Chief Librarian of the Public Library, Toronto; Mr. Aegidius Fauteux, Librarian of St. Sulpice Library, Montreal; Mr. Adjutor Savard, Foreign Editor of La Patrie, Montreal.
